TWO CHERISHED PLANS MAY BE PERFECTED

Mill to Remove Limitation from Hospital Holdings Will Make Codicil to Will Conform with Statutes.

Though the will of the late Count John A. Creighton has not been opened, so far as can be ascertained, a friend who was very close to the count says he understands the administrators of the estate will be John Schenk, John A. McShane and J. M. Daugherty. These men were intimately associated, socially and in business, with Mr. Creighton; in fact Mr. Schenk was his brother-in-law, a member of his household, his chief business adviser and perhaps closer to him than any other man. Mr. McShane and he were associates in more than one business enterprise and also related by marriage alliances. Mr. Daughother teams report equally encouraging erty has been in Mr. Creighton's office for

The will was drawn by the late James M. Woolworth. The question of its legucles to St. Joseph's hospital continues to be one of interest, inasmuch as the present law forbids any hospital holding property in its right to the amount of more than $109,000. It was understood some weeks ago that a codicil provided additional benefactions for St. Joseph's hospital exceeding blue squad, has risen to first from third the law's limit without a knowledge of this place. The standing as announced Friday technique. When this point was called to mind it was decided best to secure an amendment to the law removing that limitation and legalizing the bequests which the count had made, since there appeared ne valid reason why such bequests should not be made, and every reason why they should. Forthwith two bills were introduced in the legislature, one in the house and the other in the senate. It was hoped to get one through and signed by the governor with an emergency clause before Mr. Creighton died, but that proved impossible. The bill decided on for passage is past one house and well on its way in the other with no chance of being obstructed, so the decrees of the codicil are likely to stand.

Two Cherished Plans. From intimates of Mr. Creighton it is learned he actually grieved because he was not able to perfect at least two benefactions in addition to the large number that shall endure as stable monuments to his name for deserving young women of meager enthusiastic in his agitation of them. The second report of the canvassing squads for the Young Women's Christian association building fund shows a gain of less than $1,000 for the past two days, $789 being the amount. The spirits of the women are high, for this week's work is necessarily preliminary to a large extent and the results can not be expected until later. The captain of one team alone has promises from over forty persons of a campaign last spring, $40,000 is now drawing interest in the Omaha banks. Next week headquarters will be opened for each of the teams, the places to be announced later. The rivalry of the squads and the earnestness of the women is indicated in the change of standing of the respective teams. Mrs. George Tilden's, the self, the train began to turn a sharp Involuntarily, in a moment of carelessness, he let go the rall and made a futile grasp for the hat. The train lurched suddenly as the apex of the curve was rounded.

In an instant Mr. Lowndes was cast headlong into the darkness. He remembers that he made a wild, fruitless effort to catch hold of something. Then there was a blinding moment of horror as he flew through the air, and after that, noth-

It must have been midnight, as nearly as he can now calculate the time, when he awoke. For almost five hours he had lain in the snow. But he did not realize this then. All he knew was that he suffered terribly. When he tried to move, his hands and feet stuck to the snow. Even the side of his face was frozen to the ground.

Loosening one hand with dimculty, - he slowly raised it to his head. When he drew it away it was covered with blood. Then he saw in the moonlight that the snowdrift under him was stained red in streaks. But his wounds had stopped bleeding now. Half dazed, though was, he congratulated himself that the blood had frozen over the great gashes he knew that he was cut and brulsed all over, and that all his extremities were paralyzed with cold. The only consolation-he remembers vaguely that he once more congratulated himself-was that no bones seemed to be broken.

But he knew he must make another effort to move before it was too late. Slowly, gritting his teeth against the pain, he managed to rise to a kneeling posture. When he found he could do no more he began to crawl.

More than once the sleepy feeling returned. When he was half way up, it became so strong that he almost gave up the fight; but the memory of the signal tower, the "Love o' Life," and the knowledge that sleep meant sure death in the snow kept him going. Up, up, up! Once more he peered over the embankment Carefully feeling his way, he overcame the two-foot climb that remained. He sat beside the tracks now. By stretching out his hand he could touch the cold rail. A freight train came thundering past.

CRAWL FOR LIFE IN SNOW He shouled, but nobody heard him. The cars were so close that he had to bend his head very low to keep them from striking him. Even then he wanted to sleep, and he bit his lips until the blood came in struggling against the drowsiness. When the train had gone he started toward the signal tower. It was a repetition of the climb up the embankment, extracks, trodden hard by the track walkers. was an easier road. It was so smooth in places, to be sure, that one could push himself along as though he were a sledand that was less trouble than pushing one's knees through soft snowdrifts. The hardest fight, harder even than forcing himself forward, was the fight to keep awake. The drowsy feeling could not be driven away: It must be fought every second: he could not afford to forget it to rest, for to rest meant to sleep, and sleep meant death. But the "Love o' Life" conquered. At the foot of the tower the suffering man summoned all his strength and shouted times in vain, as he crawled toward the tower, but this time he put into the cry all the power that was left in him. The towerman heard him and soon appeared with a lantern.

Mr. Lowndes collapsed. He had made his fight and whatever else could be done for him must be done by somebody else. Today, he says, he barely recalls what happened after he reached the tower. He has only a blurred recollection that the railroad man carried him upstairs and laid him on the floor beside a stove and that curve. A gust of wind blew off his hat. I there he remained until morning, when the signal operator helped him to reach a nearby trolley track, aided him to board a car, and told the conductor to put him off close to his home, in East Orange.-New
